Core inflation shows signs of abating

According to the State Statistics Service of Ukraine, the monthly consumer price inflation (CPI) was at 14.0% in April 2015 compared to March 2015 (10.8%). However, excluding the outlier of the increase in utility prices (+109.7%), the core m/m inflation did not exceed 5%. Thus, the monthly food price inflation in April 2015 amounted to 4.4% compared to 15.6% in March; the monthly inflation of prices for furnishings and household appliances amounted to 4.9% (10.4% in March); the prices of transportation services decreased by 4.3% m/m in April compared to a 7.4% m/m increase in March.

This trend is observed for annualized inflation as well: while the overall y/y CPI amounted to 60.9% in April 2015 (March: 45.8%), most of the price indices for specific categories related to consumer products were flat y/y in April 2015 compared to March 2015 or even decreased, while the single major contributor to the price inflation was the utility price index (188.2% y/y in April 2015).

At the same time, the producer price index (PPI) amounted to 4.0% in April 2015 (compared to 10.5% in March 2015), while in annualized terms the PPI amounted to 48.6% y/y in April 2015 (compared to 51.7% in March).

Our view:

It seems that the stabilization of the exchange rate and the low UAH liquidity contributed to the slowdown of inflation, while in February-March 2015 the consumer prices were affected by the rapid devaluation of the local currency (there was a brief spike to UAH 30-35 per USD in late February). However, we note that the overall pace of core inflation is still quite high. Moreover, it erodes the real income of the population, which puts a downwards pressure on the economy through a reduction of consumption.

The NBU published the principles of the monetary policy for 2015

The NBU Council updated the principles of the Central Bank's monetary policy for 2015. As indicated in the document, the current government inflation forecast supposes three price development scenarios, in the range of 26.7%, 38.1%, and 42.8%, December-to-December. Neither of these indicators, however, conform to the concept of price stability, therefore cannot serve as guidance to the monetary policy of the Central Bank, reads the document.

In these conditions, the monetary policy of the Central bank should answer to the task of curbing the current upward price momentum, and driving consumer prices down as far as possible, laying the ground for the medium-term price target of 5% plus-or-minus 1 percentage point together with stable exchange rate movement, with a longer view on switching towards inflation targeting policy.

The Central bank in its operating activities should stick to benchmarks of net FX reserves, net domestic assets, and money base defined by the clauses of the IMF Extended Fund Facility (EFF) for Ukraine, according to the document. The National Bank should also work towards the stability of the banking system and support of economic growth where this does not contradict the core target of price stability. The National Bank should not exclude the introduction of a smart peg or managed exchange rate in case if the current depreciating pattern of the national currency persists.

Our view:

The news is positive for the financial market, signaling the emergence of a strong anchor to the realization of the economic benchmarks set by the EFF-funded reform program. The updated policy is based on assumption of enhanced independence of the National Bank. The President of Ukraine Petro Poroshenko has already initiated the corresponding legislative changes on April 27, 2015.
